

Electronic reporting in shaping of statistics information

Ewa Szkic-Czech, Director of Statistical Office in Opole

Key words: Electronic reporting, quality of information, rationality of generating of information, globalization.

The article considers the official statistics as "a factory of information" which serving the needs of its users functioning in globalization of markets and competition also functions according to certain rules of the market and the economic effectiveness of the factory undergoes parametrical valuation.

The publication is a presentation of e-reporting as an integrated method of gaining statistical data and some growth of information quality with simultaneous respect for rational functioning in this range.

The article answers the needs of practitioners of managing whose decision-making processes for their effectiveness need to be in wider and wider range supplied by statistical information and for who the problem of quality of statistic information states the current issue.